

Code 1145. Identity, Nationality and Migration: New Policies for the 21st century

Length/Duración: 90 minutes

Over the last two decades, the number of people with multiple citizenship has grown exponentially. This collective is conducting complex practices of national belonging, migration and transgenerational adoption of citizenship, developing life strategies and establishing links with several nation states without necessarily implying migration or permanent residence. Such practices are forcing us to rethink the meaning of classic concepts such as migration, naturalization, national identity or belonging. This session focuses on the study of these new multiple citizens, on their multi-citizen practices and the pragmatic value they bestow upon their different passports. Papers in this session, drawn from Europe and the Americas, raise new research approaches to the challenges and opportunities posed by multiple citizenship, as well as a reorientation of current theoretical and empirical perspectives about identity, nationality and migration in the early decades of the 21st century.

3:00 - 4:30 p.m.

Auditorium/Auditorio "Bernardo Quintana"

ORGANIZERS:

Luca Chao, Universidad de La Coruña, Spain; Pablo Mateos, Centro de Investigaciones y Estudios Superiores en Antropología Social (CIESAS), Mexico.

PRESENTERS:

David Fitzgerald, University of California, San Diego, U.S.; Yossi Harpaz, Princeton University, U.S.; Agustín Escobar, CIESAS, Mexico; Mónica Jacobo, Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (CIDE), Mexico.